Will Greenham, said Kane had put on the "the most mesmerising live show I've ever seen – it's exciting to have an African folk band headline our English folk festival". The event runs from September 16-19.

BY NICK AMES

FEARS that Deal's Maritime Folk Festival would not be taking place this year have been averted after decisive action was taken by both performers and venues.

According to the official folk-festival website, the regular organisers had decided they would be taking a break this year.

However, a number of local bands, the Astor Theatre and several of the town's pubs have joined forces and the popular festival is on between Thursday and Sunday, September

The event is one of the most eagerly-anticipated folk festivals in the South East and showcases a diverse range of talent.

So far, 50 performers are coming together in 60 sessions at ten venues. Events include a Day of Dance, hosted by Offcumduns, when seven Morris and traditional dance groups will perform in the town centre on Saturday, followed by a ceilidh in the evening.

Also on the Saturday is a Songs Of The Sea concert, with traditional singers Chris Roach, Kerry and Mandy and Paul Sirman at the Royal Hotel.

The Astor Theatre has a whole day of folkbased activity on the Saturday, including workshops from percussion to sea shanties, film-making, an all-day musical Smugglers Session in the Balcony room and Smugglers Presents in the evening, with Senegalese soulsinger Nuru Kane supported by local group

'Community should run port'

DAME Vera Lynn says she would support a scheme for local residents to buy the Port of Dover if it were to be privatised.

Speaking to the BBC, the Forces sweetheart said it was an important landmark.

Dame Vera, 93, said: "I would support the campaign for the local people to manage it.

"It was such an important scene for the boys who were going away and when they came back."

Dover MP Charlie Elphicke, who was speaking on the BBC Breakfast programme about the privatisation plans, has welcomed the high-profile support for a "people's port".

Mr Elphicke said: "It was a good

A second public consultation on the privatisation of the port ended last week and a decision on whether the port should be sold is expected to be made by the Government in the autumn.

DHB privatisation plans 'against the national interest', says leading union

A WAR of words has erupted between Dover Harbour Board and the Unite union over the potential privatisation of the port, writes Mathew Beech.

The trade union has accused DHB's proposal of being detrimental to the UK's transport and economic interests. The warning came as the consultation period on the privatisation of the port closed.

There are fears that a positive response could spark a quick-fire sale.

In a statement on the Unite website, the union claims it has the backing of the ferry operators, while two of the ferry companies are said to have sent official letters of complaint to the Department for Transport.

Revolution

On the website, the union says: "Despite the clear pressure on ferry companies at the port, the Port Authority wants a sale, claiming trust status limits its room to raise capital.

"The proposed privatisation scheme would unleash the biggest revolution in the corporate structure of the highly-profitable publicly-owned port in more than 400 years, since James I provided the October 1606 charter under which the trust port now operates.

"The latest published accounts (2008) show that profits of around £25 million were made on revenues of around £61 million."

The union also claims that removing the trust status would lead to falling labour standards, lower wages and training for young people in the local community being scrapped.

Julia Long, Unite national officer for the docks and ferries sector, said: "The proposed privatisation of Dover is against the national interest. It is a disastrous idea and should proceed no further "The UK is an island nation. We need a first-class sea port like Dover to be in public hands.

"There is simply too much at stake to leave the running of this vital link to Europe in the hands of those who will milk this national treasure for profits at the expense of the travelling public and British commerce."

The DHB reacted by pointing out what it believes are flaws in Unison's argument.

In a counter-statement, DHB said Unison had "failed to grasp the rationale and driving force behind the Port of Dover's voluntary privatisation scheme".

DHB claims its proposal will be beneficial for both Dover and the UK by allowing new investment and improvements to be made to the port.

Without the removal of trust status, DHB claims that developments to cope with the forecasted increase in traffic over the next 30 years would not materialise, causing "unsustainable congestion and a wholly inefficient port".

Opportunity

The statement then points out that DHB's plan would create the Port of Dover Community Trust, which would have an initial £10 million to spend on boosting the area and aiding regeneration.

DHB added: "Unite's statement fails to recognise that the Port of Dover's scheme is a unique opportunity to expand the business, create jobs and prosperity, unite the port with its community and secure the long-term future of a key national asset that will need to expand and grow if it is to remain the jewel in the crown everyone wishes it to be."

A small fire was lit on Saturday, August 28, at about 1am.

Staff at the petrol station in Limekiln Street were able to put out the blaze themselves, and nobody was injured.

The man was arrested on suspicion of starting the fire and has been released on bail until Sunday, October 10, pending enquiries.

Police would like to speak to the man who alerted station staff to the fire as he may have information that will help the investigation. Phone police on 01622 690690 and quote crime reference FY/13870/10.

A TWENTY-year British record for Channel swimming has been smashed.

Rebecca Lewis, 26, from Cumbria, completed the 21-mile crossing in eight hours and 35 minutes, knocking 13 minutes off the previous record set by Dover resident and Queen of the Channel, Alison Streeter.

The physiotherapist also came within a whisker of usurping the men's record, falling only one minute shy of the time.

Åfter completing her third Channel swim, the Cumbrian swimmer has said she will return with the aim of beating the men's British record.

Cuts in schools funding 'will hit local economy'

Axing building scheme 'likely to harm traders as well as pupils'

GOVERNMENT cutbacks will hit Deal and Sandwich schools badly, according to leading local Labour politicians.

As pupils return to school, Gordon Cowan, the Labour leader of the opposition on Dover District Council, slammed as "disgraceful" and "damaging" the decision by the coalition government to axe the Building Schools For The Future programme.

He said the scheme would have seen massive investment in the district's schools and young people.

It has been axed as part of the Conservative and Liberal Democrat administration's moves to save billions of pounds to combat the huge national debt.

Cllr Cowan said: "This disgraceful decision by the Conservative minister for education shows what the Con-Dem coalition is all about.

"It is about dogmatic, damaging cuts. Cuts which will affect front-line services directly. Cuts which will keep Dover district at the bottom of the educational league in Kent. Cuts which will put every child in the district at a disadvantage through their school career. Cuts which will harm the local businesses involved in designing, building and supplying local Building Schools For The Future was an initiative of the Labour government and would have seen a total of £1.8 billion invested in secondary schools throughout Kent.

The axing of the scheme is estimated to mean the loss of some £60 million of schoolbuilding investment in Dover district.

Mike Eddy, Labour's deputy leader in Dover, said: "Local teachers, governors and students have all put in hours and hours of work on preparing to get the district's schools rebuilt or refurbished.

"Overnight that work has been binned by the current government. This district has lost millions in investment, not just in school buildings for future generations but also for the local economy.

"And the Conservative and Lib-Dem majority on Dover District Council have slavishly kowtowed to their coalition bosses at Westminster by refusing to condemn an ill-thought-out act of savagery."

In her monthly report to the parish council she said police had also received complaints about noisy and speeding mopeds after dark in Marke Wood recreation ground, off Dover Road.

However, the meeting heard that so far no damage to the grounds appeared to have been caused.

Bands draw the crowds to picnic

WINDS and cloudy skies could not keep the crowds away from Walmer Parish Council's sixth Picnic On The Green.

An addition to the afternoon's activities were local band City Lightz, who attracted a younger crowd, followed by The Kingsdown Band.

Parish council chairman Pat Heath said: "It was wonderful to see residents enjoying themselves with good food, good music and good company... and the sun did come out eventually.

Christine Orridge, chairman of the council's events committee, said: "Thanks must go to residents who turned out in their droves to support this ever-popular event, as well as all the groups who attended and, of course, the two fantastic local bands.'

Teenage cyclists raise £5,000 for HIV projects

THREE students have raised thousands of pounds for HIV projects in Africa after a 780-mile endurance cycle around Britain.

Starting in Edinburgh, the route took them down the east coast before they cut across to the west of the country and along the south, finishing in Deal.

Max Linington, 17, Andrew Goodman, 17, and Chris Bowdler, 16, who all attend Tonbridge School, completed the challenge unsupported between July 19 and 30, sleeping in tents carried with them. So far they have raised £5,588.

Max said: "We wanted to achieve something of note before we left school and we decided that it should be a charity-based event.

"We had also been inspired by the many Sport Relief events and also the opportunity to explore the UK, like Eddie Izzard."

Max mentioned that the three lads are keen on another adventure for charity but this may have to wait until next summer.

Funds raised will be donated to Sekolo Projects, a non-profit organisation aiming to prevent new HIV infections in young people from Namibia.

Nuru Kane signals festival high point

The Deal Hoodeners will be at the Walmer Lifeboat House on the Sunday morning and local hostelries
– including The Bohemian, The Ship
Inn, The Saracen's Head, The Deal
Hoy, the Royal Hotel, the Prince
Albert and the Green Berry – will be hosting a number of informal 'sing-arounds' and spontaneous musicmaking sessions.

Smugglers organiser Will Green-ham said: The aim is to attract the widest audience to the town and just about all the events are free."

Deal's folk-festival weekend has been run since 1996, but the appearance of Nuru Kane marks a high point for the event, as he is one of the top African blues artists currently

A recent review of his work in The Guardian ran: "There's a plethora of talented Senegalese singer-song-writers around at the moment, but few have the musical breadth of Nuru Kane.

"Starting out playing good-time party mbalax (think early Youssou N'Dour) he had a rethink after visiting Marrakech. The result is trancelike gnawa meets Senegalese soul, meets Malian blues, meets Fela Kuti, with a touch of Bob Marley.

ROCK: Cocos Lovers are supporting Nuru Kane

"Production-wise the sound is pared down - so no thumping bass lines - but overall it's a funky roots melange with Kane's soulful delivery sounding like a silky hybrid of Marley and Keziah Jones."

Mr Greenham said: "I saw Nuru Kane at Small World Festival in May - it was the most mesmerising live show I've ever seen and we are absolutely delighted to bring him and his band to the Astor Theatre.

"Not only that, it's exciting to have an African folk band headline our English folk festival."

MAKING SAIL: The SS Tenacious sailed to Dover on its way to France as part of a Jubilee Sailing Trust voyage

Tenacious all shipshape for French frolics

WALKERS along the shore were treated to the sight of a majestic vessel plying its way past Sandwich Bay and Deal and on to SS Tenacious was on its way to Boulogne in France and then Portsmouth.

The vessel was the largest wooden tall ship in the world built during the last century and the biggest since the heyday of sail.

Facilities

Its onboard facilities enable people with physical disabilities to enjoy sailing.

Since 2000, the ship has sailed more than 170,000 miles, including six voyages across the Atlantic Ocean.

It is operated by the Jubilee Sailing Trust and special facilities onboard Tenacious include hoists which allow wheelchair-users to be lifted up the masts.

In addition, the ship's wheel can be operated by a joystick so someone with even the most limited mobility can steer the 206ftlong vessel.

Each crew consists of roughly equal numbers of able-bodied people and those with physical disabilities. They share the responsibilities of running the ship at sea 24 hours

BY NICK AMES

Trustee Ned Neve said: "That's where you get the integration – when you really get to understand each other."

Some 8,500 people have sailed on Tenacious over the last decade. Mr Neve said: "The experience and confidence lasts the rest of their lives.

The idea for a new tall ship began in the early 1990s when the trust's existing tall ship, Lord Nelson, was proving increasingly popular.

The trust received a £6 million grant from the Lottery Sports Fund, as well as donations from individuals and companies.

Groups of dedicated volunteers of mixed abilities took part in the building of the vessel between 1996 and 2000 in a specially set-up shipyard at Merlin Quay, Woolston, Southampton.

Because it is made of Siberian larch and has no metal fixings, the trust says Tenacious could last as long as 300 years.

Mr Neve said: "She is fulfilling her mission admirably well."

NEWS IN BRIEF

Your vote decides funding

RESIDENTS are being invited to help decide how cash grants to voluntary groups and worthy causes in the Dover area are allocated ahead of a meeting in October.

It is part of a move by Dover District Neighbourhood Forums to pilot 'participatory budgeting', which involves local people in deciding how £61,400 in this year's Small Community Capital Projects fund is awarded.

Available for community projects to all types of groups across the district, grants of up to £2,500 are on offer.

Eligible applicants will be invited to a You Decide event to make a short presentation.

For the Walmer, Deal and Sandwich area, this will be at Walmer Science College, Salisbury Road, Walmer, on Saturday, October 2.

Local residents and groups can attend and will be invited to vote electronically on each project. These votes will be the primary deciding factor when councillors finalise the awards.

Lead thieves raid church

THIEVES have stolen lead from the roof of a church in Woodnesborough.

They struck just four months after a fundraising campaign for the Norman church raised £70,000 for repairs to its tower.

Now it is expected to cost £55,000 to repair the roof plus damage caused by rain that got into the St Mary's Church building because of the theft.

It is believed the raid took place on the weekend of August 21-22.

A temporary emergency tarpaulin is now in place to protect the interior.

Find had to remain top-secret

BY MARIJKE COX

A WARTIME enthusiast has revealed the moment he and a team of divers uncovered the secret location of a rare German bomber 70 years after it was shot down during the Battle of Britain.

The Dornier 17, which is the only one known to still exist, was discovered on Goodwin Sands off the coast of Deal by pensioner John Franklin, two years after it was first found by the RAF.

Its location had been kept a guarded secret by the RAF to keep looters at bay until it was ready to be raised from the seabed.

But Gravesend resident Mr Franklin, who is a member of the Blenheim Society, was directed to the site in April by enthusiasts believing the wreck to be a Blenheim bomber from the Second World War.

But a dive team discovered it was the unique Dornier 17, known as the 'Flying Pencil' due to its sleek design.

Mr Franklin was contacted by the RAF and he kept the discovery a secret.

But the RAF has now announced that the bomber, which was found lying on its roof, will be brought up and displayed in its museum in London as part of the Battle of Britain Beacon exhibition.

Mr Franklin said: "This is the first time I've really been able to talk about it.

AT LAST THE TRUTH WILL OUT: John Franklin discovered the site of the lost Dornier 17 but was asked to keep it a secret by the RAF to prevent looters from getting to it before it could be rescued and preserved for posterity

"It started in April when I was sent a map showing what was believed to be a Blenheim bomber on Goodwin Sands.

"I set up a dive team in Folkestone and after going down there we managed to determine it wasn't what I thought.

"I knew it wasn't a Blenheim from the differences in the tail and fuse lage. We did three or four dives, but there are problems with diving conditions in that area because of the tides — you could get washed away — so the team could only go down for 40-45 minutes and the visibility was poor.

"We were very excited about the find. I was contacted by the RAF asking what I was doing and they explained about the discovery two years ago."

The Dornier was part of a large enemy formation intercepted above Deal by RAF fighter aircraft on August 26, 1940.

The German planes were trying to launch an attack on airfields in Essex.

During the interception, one of the Dorniers, which was being flown by Flight Sergeant Willi Effmert, attempted a wheelsup landing on the Goodwin Sands.

He touched down safely but was captured

He touched down safely but was captured along with another crew member to become prisoners of war in Canada.

The aircraft sank on the sands.

Air Vice-Marshal Peter Dye, directorgeneral of the RAF Museum, said its discovery was of national and international importance.

"The aircraft is a unique and unprecedented survivor from the Battle of Britain," he said.

"It is particularly significant because, as a bomber, it formed the heart of the Luftwaffe assault and the subsequent Blitz.

"The Dornier will provide an evocative and moving exhibit that will allow the museum to present the wider story of the Battle of Britain and highlight the sacrifices made by the young men of both air forces and from many nations."

The RAF Museum is working with English Heritage and Wessex Archaeology to survey the wreck site.

A recovery plan is being drawn up to protect the aircraft from further damage.

QUESTION & ANSWER

Tell us a bit about yourself.

I'm an artist working mainly with paint. In I'm an artist working mainly man the last 10 years I've been trying to think of ways of involving the public in the making of art. Everyone has creative potential, but not many people have been encouraged to have a go. Like music or writing, painting is a language; it only works if everyone understands it. It doesn't work if only a few people are allowed to participate.

Now did you start painting?

My mother was a painter. I decided I wanted to be an artist when I was four, although I didn't get to use oil paints until I went to art college when I was 19.

What is your preferred painting medium?

I love oil paint, because it has a wonderful 1 love oil paint, because it has a mediate texture and richness of colour. It is also the most versatile medium. It can possess the transparency of watercolour but can also have the solidity of a modelling medium.

Who has been an inspiration to you and your work?

While I was at art school I was inspired by Braque and Juan Gris, the cubists and Titian for his portraits. Also, I think it was seeing the Tintorettos in Venice that inspired me to work on a large scale. Picasso has been a lifelong hero of mine for doing exactly what he wanted and not compromising.

The most inspiring artist is my daughter, Lucy Somers, because she has such an unusual way of thinking. She always surprises me with her work and is a joy to work with.

Is there a particular area you like to paint or work in?

I love to work in public. I feel particularly happy painting on boarded-up buildings. I enjoy the challenge of thinking of the most appropriate subject for the building and I love to watch people's faces at the point where the abstract colours fall into place and create the illusion of depth. I think paintings should be seen in public and should inspire people when they are not expecting it.

Do you have a favourite piece you are particularly proud of?

I felt proud of a mural on a hoarding Aaround the Strand pub in Deal. It was painted in 2009 but was removed when the renovations were completed. The exciting thing about it was that I was creating the design as I went along, relying totally on the colour to give it cohesion. What was great about this was that people came up to me afterwards and said that they were coming out especially to see what changes I was making and to see how I was going to finish it.

Which areas of Dover and the surrounding coast lend themselves to art and why?

I'm interested in painting on Dover front purely because it has been so neglected, it makes me want to paint on it to create a feeling of life and colour. I think the coast lends itself to art because of its potential as a tourist destination. Visitors are necessary for our economy and visual attractions should be maximised to encourage visitors.

What advice would you give to budding artists?

I think it's important to think broadly about where you want your art to be seen. Then it's vital not to give up until you are doing what you want to do.

What do you like to do in your free time?

I don't have much free time. I have a fami-A ly, I work with my husband running an art gallery in Deal, The Burning Bush, which showcases the work of local artists. I also run my own teaching organisation called Artlark, which operates from Northbourne Parish Hall.

Any final comments?

The High Street Murals can be seen along with other art works on my website at www.pennybearman.co.uk.

Reporter Mathew Beech talks to Deal-based artist Penny Bearman who reveals her lifelong love of oil paints and why creating a mural for the town's Strand pub was one of her proudest achievements.

Milibands win MPs' support

BY MARIJKE COX

KENT'S former Labour MPs have thrown their weight behind the Miliband brothers as the siblings battle it out to be Labour leader.

The brothers, who have both visited the county in recent months, are up against former health secretary Andy Burnham, exeducation minister Ed Balls and back-bencher Diane Abbott.

David Miliband, 45, was the first to enter the race after Mr Brown stepped down as Prime Minister in May.

Cuts could force police to focus on crime hot-spots

BY STEVE KNIGHT

TROUBLE-hit communities may steal bobbies from towns with lower crime rates once Kent Police learn the full extent of planned Government spending cuts.

revealed this week the county force will have no option but to slash 1,500 jobs if the Home Office removes 20 per cent of its funding – the equivalent of about £53 million over the next four years.

He told KOS Media that every aspect of his budget needed to be analysed as a result, and it made good business sense to deploy officers where they were needed most.

The decision could result in the more trouble-free areas like Sevenoaks losing some of their officers to crime hot spots such as Gillingham and Margate.

Mr Learmonth also revealed the force may have to scrap or combine some of its six county divisions in an attempt to save even more money from the budget.

"The decisions on where resources will be allocated will be based on demand and not historical statistics," he said. "It's going to be done in a scientific way and we will carry out the proper analysis to determine where we place our resources to get the best results.

"We would be foolish to put lots of officers where there isn't the demand – it's just business sense."

When asked if the plans might upset residents in quieter areas who still pay the same level of police council tax as everyone else, Mr Learmonth replied: "It's not about officers; it's about level of service and everywhere in Kent will receive a police service."

Earlier this year Chancellor George Osborne asked ministers to draw up plans for spending cuts of 25 per cent and 40 per cent, but the final figures will not be revealed until the Comprehensive Spending Review is published on October 20.

Mr Learmonth revealed that although Kent Police had only laid out its plans should it receive a 20 per cent cut, it had also modelled for savings of 17.5 per cent and 25 per cent.

"We've not been given any Government figures at all yet," he added. "If it turns out to be less than 20 per cent then that gives us some extra options. If it's worse then it's much easier for us to gear up than it is to start again from scratch.

"But we've had to come up with something because we can't afford to wait. People were starting to speculate about jobs so I thought it was best to get things out into the open.

"I'm hoping the cuts will turn out to be less than 20 per cent, but if it's as much as 40 per cent then that will be a huge challenge for us."

lenge for us."

Kent Police currently employs 3,728 officers and 2,932 civilian staff including community support officers. If the force loses 20 per cent of its funding then about 1,000 civilian and 500 police posts will be axed, albeit mostly through natural wastage and retirement

Mr Learmonth said the main difference the public would see in that scenario would be the probable axing of some of the existing management structures — the six regional areas the force is currently split into.

He had already hinted upon his appointment in July that the number of superintendents and chief superintendents may be cut along the same lines.

"The bedrock is neighbourhood policing

"The bedrock is neighbourhood policing and that's something I want to maintain as much as possible," he added. "But the public will understand that if you take £53m out of the budget then things will inevitably change."

Apart from 'priority' departments including education and the Ministry of Justice, all other government departments have been asked to draw up plans for spending cuts.

Kent Police are currently in the middle of a huge restructuring programme, and in July the force announced that nearly 200 police recruits had their places cancelled.

"I was surprised policing didn't get ringfenced in some way, particularly when you consider some of the departments that were," Mr Learmonth said. "The public have come to expect a high-

"The public have come to expect a highquality police service and if you asked people what their priorities were then I'm reasonably confident policing would be up there. However, it's right that we take our fair share of the cuts."

Meanwhile, Kent Police Authority chairwoman Ann Barnes has described the scale of the potential cuts as "shocking".

of the potential cuts as "shocking".

She said: "There will be hard choices to make but we will be as transparent and open as possible with regards to the decisions we will have to make."

Planning for our district's future

hepway District Council is working with partners to provide a Local Development Framework (LDF) to guide the planning of the district.

The most important part of the LDF is the Core Strategy. This long-term plan will include the major sites of change, regeneration and conservation within the district, and set out key principles for future development.

The LDF Core Strategy has so far benefited from hundreds of local people getting involved. Comments from residents, as well as technical studies, are guiding how necessary development can be provided in Shepway.

Development aims to:

- Make our towns more attractive and sustain rural communities
- Make housing more accessible, especially to accommodate the natural growth in the local number of households, mostly made up of people living individually or in small groups (e.g. elderly people)
- Attract families, higher-income workers, and new businesses
- Maintain demand for essential services such as schools and local shops, and provide new facilities

Much of the development will be provided on small plots across the district, which will be identified later in the LDF. But some important sites are under consideration now – including Westenhanger and New Romney.

Get involved in Westenhanger and New Romney

Local landowners and developers will soon be asking for thoughts on ideas for key developments that may feature in the Core Strategy plan. Key features of potential areas of change are being drafted to inform the LDF Core Strategy plan for the district. These are not planning applications, but provide a chance to influence the general shape of proposals at the beginning of the development process.

Have your say on what the sites should include - if built, for example:

- How should green spaces and properties be laid out, and what should their other key features be?
- What kind of community facilities would benefit local residents best?

Westenhanger

ACHIEVEMENT: Student Andy Crisford receives his iPod from mini-school leader Jim Grant

Full attendance reward for Andy

A MARSH Academy student has been rewarded after achieving a remarkable 100 per cent attendance record during his 11 years at the school.

Andy Crisford, 15, from Dymchurch started in 1999 and has not taken a single day off since.

The academy's attendance officer Sally Hooper, mini-school leader Jim Grant and student development leader Karen Todd were so impressed they agreed to reward Andy with an iPod in the end-of-year assembly.

Mrs Hooper said: "This is a fantastic achievement for Andy. I don't know of any other student in the area who has managed to achieve 100 per cent attendance for their whole time at school."

Mr Grant agreed and said: "We are very proud of Andy for this achievement and it was a pleasure to be able to reward him for his efforts."

The St Mary's pupils easily picked up the moves, and very soon everybody was dancing to a traditional song Baisa Fulne Bihanna Yo, which translates as Young flowering this morning.

Nepalese dancing is used in celebration and

The festival takes place each year at Pent Valley's site in Surrenden Road, Folkestone in October.

To conclude the session and to rapturous applause, Year 8 students Benarji Bina Rai, Enuka Gurung, Nisa Pun, and Puja Roka danced to Lekhama Jane (Going to the hill).

Aiming one step beyond ska revival

BY TOM BETTS

A CARNIVAL of ska was held at Folkestone harbour as music fans came out in force for the first Skabour festival in the town.

Skinheads, mods and rude boys partied into the night, enjoying sets from more than a dozen acts.

A festival official said: "The sun shone, the music played and thousands danced to bands and DJs per-forming on the outside stage as part of the free daytime events, which also included market stalls and a scooter

Evening events also proved popular, with sellout performances by The Beat, Ska-tonics, Arthur Kay And The Originals and Intensified.

Organisers say up to 8,000 people attended during the weekend and as much as £300,000 could have been spent in the town.

Fans travelled from as far afield as Japan, Italy and Spain to attend.

John 'Teflon' Sims, one of the organisers, said: "It was amazing to see this number of people coming to Folkestone and having such a great time. People were smiling, dancing and feeling good.

"Most of those enjoying themselves were families, with parents who would profess not to be ska fans despite knowing all the words when singing along to songs by Madness, The Specials and others.

"We planned for a good-natured, incident-free three days – and that's what we got. People were only interested in having fun and joining in."

The event was organised by Mr Sims and Andi Elliott, Andy Shorten and Trevor Moss.

Mr Moss said: "I was amazed by the number of people who came looking for an organiser to shake hands with and thank us for staging this festival. "We were overwhelmed by the number of people asking if this was going to be an annual event, but whether we bring back harbour festival and the air show to Folkestone.

"It seems evident people feel the town lacks regular events and festivals they can enjoy and feel proud to be a part of.

"If we can build on this year's Skabour, we can go some way towards achieving those aspirations," he said.

"The festival also boosted the local economy, which has had a quiet summer.

"Many people volunteered their time to help put on this event and the organisers would like to thank them, the bands and DJs, sponsors and supporters for all of their assistance which made the weekend such great fun.

No owner lined up for Port of Dover

I am writing to correct the article published in this week's (Wednesday, August 25) Yourdover entitled 'Drop your people's port plan, Elphicke is urged'.

In talking about the Port of Dover's voluntary privatisation scheme, the article misquotes me as saying: "We have a new owner lined up who shares this vision and would help us provide this investment which would otherwise be very difficult to come across in these economic times'

We have no owner lined up. What I explained was that we would, of course, be looking for an investor who would share our objectives and vision of where we want to take the port business. However, we will not even look at potential investors until the minister has made a decision on whether or not he is minded to approve our scheme.

Privatisation would release the shackles of our Trust Port status which prevents us from both expanding the business and borrowing to deliver significant additional port capacity when needed.

Kent's further education system needs a thorough revision, believes Gary Wright...

THE other week I wrote about how I couldn't understand the huge pressure there is on 18-year-olds to get into university at any cost - including that £21,000 debt after three years.

My attention has now been drawn to the scandalous way many 16-year-olds are being treated. Here's a little publicised fact for you: did you know that almost every secondary school in Kent with a sixth form forbids any visits or input by colleges?

That means year 11 pupils don't really get the chance to see what else is on offer. The school provides its sixth form option and the pupil makes a choice

A cynic might say this is to ensure schools retain the funding for two more years - most college bosses would agree. And our children are really being let down.

The first let down is the fact that the average sixth form is not particularly vocational. Nor does their one-size-fits-all approach to A-levels suit many.

I know of two cases where youngsters had to choose four A-level subjects and were told they could drop one after a year. Photography A-levels were offered to youngsters who had no interest at all.

So students are forced to choose the A-levels available rather than the ones they may wish to take. A case of youngsters having to fit the system rather than a system geared up to individual needs

But what happens if your child doesn't meet the grades for sixth form? Bear in mind you are dealing with an individual who has geared his life and expectations, driven by the school, for the next two years to a place in sixth form. I will illustrate this with one school: Norton Knatchbull in Ashford. A decent boys' grammar with an above average record in pupils attaining five grade Cs or above at GCSE, one of the main benchmarks for schools. Knatchbull insists its sixth formers will need eight grade Cs or above to get in. They must achieve Bs in subjects they wish to take at A-level and a minimum of Cs in English and maths.

In one case this year a pupil has managed only a D in maths and has been told two days before term begins that there is no place for him because the sixth form 'could be filled twice over"

He was never warned about this, so a week after learning his results has begun the search for a college place. And the school admits it doesn't allow colleges to access its pupils. Additionally, when it was accused by his parents of casting someone aside because his exam results were a little low, the master agreed.

To me this is more worrying than the way pupils are forced through an academic system which results in a £20,000 debt for what in many cases is a useless degree.

So, the warning for all GCSE pupils and their parents is clear: take a look at what colleges can offer and do not assume sixth form is best.

I believe it's the fault of the system that has evolved and a teaching staff geared up to retaining their income rather than what's best for their students. Either they know it's failing the students and they can't be bothered to change it, or they are so out of touch that they don't recognise how badly they are letting youngsters down.

Colleges must be allowed access to our secondary schools – and schools must do more for those individuals who fall below their predicted results.

It's time to cast our net over EU sharks

Your paper wouldn't be reporting the sorry plight of our local fishing industry if it wasn't for the rest of Europe's fishing fleets scraping up everything possible from around our shores.

It all started when Broadstairs Tory and Prime Minister Edward Heath handed control of our fishing grounds to the EU (Evil Union) in 1972. Since then our centuries-old fishing industry has been virtually wiped out by draconian rules that favour other countries' fishing fleets

It is also disgusting that our government now has to crawl to Brussels in order to get protection for sandbanks around the Kent

They are our fishing grounds and we should not have to grovel to Brussels for permission about what we do with them.

We should leave the EU now and build back our fishing fleets to what they once were and also save the British taxpayer countless billions of pounds every year by stopping all payments to Brussels

And let me remind Thanet South Tory MP Laura Sandys, it was her party that got our fishing industry in the state it is in today.

Walking can leave cancer risk behind

I'm writing to let your readers know there is now strong scientific evidence that being regularly physically active reduces your risk of developing cancer later in life.

One of the easiest ways to be physically active is walking. It's something most people can do without any preparation and you don't need special equipment to do it.

This is why we at World Cancer Research Fund (WCRF) have launched our Walking Together campaign, where people can support us by organising sponsored walks for family and friends.

The money raised will help us continue funding cancer-prevention research and raising awareness that people can reduce their risk of cancer by eating healthily, being physically active and maintaining a healthy weight.

We also hope it will encourage people to get into the habit of walking, both as a hobby and as part of their daily lives.

To find out more about the Walking Together campaign, email events@wcrf.org or call 020 7343 4205. You can also visit our website at www.wcrf-uk.org/walk to find out more information, register your event and download free resources.

WINTER GARDENS' NEW SEASON

Various dates

Winter Gardens, Margate.

THE summer might be over, but there is plenty to look forward to the Winter Gardens this autumn.

Over the next few months, the evenings will draw in and the weather will turn colder, but a good laugh or an uplifting concert will keep the chills at bay.

The new season gets off with a flourish as the Texas Tenors roll into town this Saturday and the fun continues with the nostalgic Disco Inferno later this month, when over-18s can get down and boogie to the best of 70s and 80s soul and disco music.

More nostalgia will be on offer when the venue runs a trip to see the award-winning musical Jersey Boys in London on Thursday, September 23. Based on the true story of Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons, the hit show tells the story of how four boys from humble backgrounds invented an exciting new sound and went on to sell 100 million records

Singer-songwriter Beth Nielsen Chapman pays a visit to demonstrate why her songs have been performed by such huge stars as Elton John, Bette Midler, Neil Diamond, Emmylou Harris and more. Talented performers from local schools, theatre groups and societies will gather for the Winter Gardens Showcase, giving rising stars the chance to shine on the big stage.

Next month, veteran comedian Jenny Eclair marks her 50th birthday by wondering if an old dog really can learn new tricks. Along with her sharp and insightful stand-up comedy, Eclair has also won new fans of all ages with her appearances on Grumpy Old Women, in which she casts her comic eye over life's absurdities.

Popular children's characters such as Bob the Builder, Angelina Ballerina and Fireman Sam will be seen on stage together for the first time when Premier Productions presents The Little Big Club - Live in Concert. Young audiences can be part of the fun when this magical show visits Margate on October 10.

Celebrating their 30th anniversary, Level 42 bring their national tour to the Winter Gardens to play hits such as Lessons in Love, Leaving Me Now and Running in the Family.

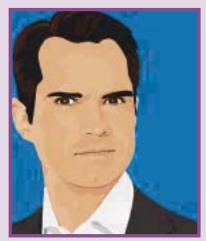

There will be a rumble in the ring when LDN Wrestling presents an evening of big men and big talk, with stars such as Karl Barbarian Krammer due to appear.

Plan B's concert has already sold out, but Danger Mouse, the world's number one secret agent, is on a mission to entertain with his first theatre tour. See Danger Mouse in action with his faithful sidekick Penfold, the evil Baron Silas Greenback and other popular characters in this fun family show.

Former Mike and the Mechanics frontman,

STAR LINE-UP: Clockwise from above: Level 42, and comedian Jenny Eclair and Jimmy Carr

Paul Carrack, will delight fans with his timeless soul voice in November, while comedy fans can look forward to one of today's most successful stand-ups. Jimmy Carr's relentless touring schedule has been rewarded by packed theatres all over the country, as he delivers his hilarious but strictly adult comedy, which is not for the easily offended.

There will be more hilarity when Al Murray, the Pub Landlord, brings his barrel of fun to Margate that month, while identical pop stars Jedward, who shot to fame as the most controversial act on last year's series of The X-Factor, will be taking to the stage.

Other highlights of the new season include performances by singer Jane Macdonald and comedian Trevor Lock. Tickets can be booked online at www.margatewintergardens.co.uk or calling the box office on 01843 292795/296111.

IF you want to stay on top in business today it's crucial to master the modern skill of networking.

These are the reasons why networking has become so important to small businesses:

- 1. Networking is seen in this current financial climate as low or no-cost marketing
- 2. Networking is seen as the opposite to hardsell and cold-calling.
- 3. Networking is seen as a 'social', more comfortable or easier way to gain customers, without having to sell or be sold to.

But there's a problem with that:

- Networking isn't cheap.
   Without skill, networking is random and produces random results.
- 3. Without a clear strategy and the skills to back it up, networking produces a lame bit of PR of questionable value.

More mature professionals are often quite comfortable socialising. They enjoy it, even. But the rules have ALL changed.

My father was a Rotarian for 44 years. He would have shuddered at the thought of 'selling' to his club colleagues, and yet, in his day, they all bought from each other. The loyalty was staggering. Not any more.

Networking is, to put it politely, a free-for-all. (Virtually) anyone can turn up, and sometimes the competition is fierce!

Standing out is the first hurdle. What every networker wants to ensure is that they get noticed and remembered. And if you're just one of 27 grey suits, how do you make that happen?

How can you leave the meeting having made a lasting impression? How can you ensure that in the crowd, when they think, 'Oh, there's that great accountant I met', yours will be the name that springs to mind? Your name and the name of your business need to be front of mind when people think 'account-ant'; just like everyone chants McDonald's, when they think fast food or burgers.

So how can you and your business achieve this pole position? It's all about influence.

We used to call it 'selling'. Now, we're more sophisticated and we call it 'influencing'.

Building profitable relationships in business is down to one thing: your ability to influence the other person. It always has been. It's just that now, the psychology around it has changed.

We need a consistent system. These are the stages of the process. When you get them right, profits flow as a consequence. When you get them wrong, there's often a great deal of disappointment and a dent to the bank balance.

Which brings me to the best-kept secret of faceto-face networking: online follow-up – the way to multiply results and make more money.

Family-run business aims to build on roots and reputation

AN ASHFORD family business is using the skills and experience gained on major construction projects in the capital to deliver quality buildings back home.

Wealden Woodstyle, set up 10 years ago by two long-term Kennington friends, has been making a name for itself working on apartments, hospitals and custodial buildings for major London firms.

Originally set up as a partnership by Darren Black, pictured, and Simon Blake, the company has now been incorporated as a limited company and is widening its focus to take on projects in Ashford and beyond.

While Darren's

While Darren's background is in timber-framed buildings and bespoke kitchens, partner Simon has building very much in his blood. His grandfather's company, Beaney and Sons, was responsible for a great deal of building in Ashford in the 1960s.

The company has established a reputation for high-quality design and build work and wants to play a part in making sure the new buildings currently appearing as part of Ashford's rapid expansion are well designed and conceived.

Darren's wife Zoe and Simon's wife Daniella are also actively involved as directors of this well-rooted family business with strong local connections.

"We care passionately about Ashford as we grew up here and saw it develop from a market town to the thriving business centre it is now," said Darren.

"Simon's grandfather played a part in Ashford's post-war growth and we want to continue that by offering a quality product delivered by skilled local tradesmen."

NHBC-registered
Wealden Woodstyle, which provides subcontracting services in carpentry and joinery as well as offering a full building service, has now moved to new premises just outside Ashford, where the landlord immediately asked the company to take on a major office repairs project on an adjacent

"It is important to use a local builder because you can visit the company, check out their work, talk to them about their ideas and take advantage of their local knowledge," explained Simon.

Wealden Woodstyle has worked in the retail and housing sectors as well as on major Private Finance Initiative (PFI) schemes and corporate office builds. "We're keen to use that experience on building projects in Ashford," Simon added.

Ed Hill meets Sally Starley who knows the long-term value of personal service at Ashford's Tiny Tots baby shop IT MAY be a tough time in the retail world at the moment but one independent trader in Ashford says you can be a success if you are prepared to go the extra mile.

Sally Starley is the owner of Tiny Tots. She started the business 32 years ago. Her shop at the corner of Bank Street and Elwick Road specialises in everything parents need for their newborn baby.

She said: "I think our success is definitely down to knowing our customers. People come to us for advice. We don't push hard to sell them things but we hope they remember that we have been helpful when they do decide to buy something."

Tiny Tots is now the oldest independent baby store in the south of England and attracts customers from around the country.

Daytrippers are ticket to boost in coach company's business

COACH companies have enjoyed something of a boost thanks to the recession, volcanic ash clouds and people's renewed interest in holidaying in the UK.

Alan Johnson has been in charge of Crosskeys coaches in Folkestone for the last 10 years and said business is continuing to hold up well.

He inherited the reins from his parents, when it was based in Newingreen, and has established a loyal customer base and developed some excellent working relationships with major tour operators.

The company, which has 22 coaches in its fleet, now operates out of Caesars Way in Folkestone and offers routes to a wide variety of UK and European destinations.

Despite the recession inevitably hitting everybody in the travel market, Mr Johnson said there have been some high points to come out of the past year.

"It's been steady, it was quiet at the beginning of the year but then that was down to the snow," he said.

"We picked up extra business during the ash cloud, transferring people from Dover docks to various airports.

"We've just finished our summer with taking foreign students to and fro and there wasn't any decrease on that from last year. The cruise ships coming into Dover are still keeping us busy.

Asked about the advantages of taking the coach compared to a car or plane, he said: "It saves on parking, you can be picked up at one point and be dropped off at a central location. You haven't got to worry about finding a space or congestion.

"A lot of people think when they're given the price for coach hire it's quite high, but when you divide it down by 50 people, it's actually quite reasonable.

"Daytrips are among our most popular offering, with London being one of the most popular destinations. But then we do a lot of holidays for customers where they hire the coach for the week and go off to north Wales, Scotland or Newcastle.

However, a new trend has emerged over the summer, with theme parks now a hit with families wanting to go by coach.

Mr Johnson said: "We've done better this year on the theme parks. Possibly people have been staying at home this year so they've been taking their children out on a few different day trips rather than one holiday."

"Hopefully it's going to be positive from now on, but you never know. You've always got to be careful, just in case."

Home and business security is one area where people want friendly service but welcome the back-up that comes from a company that is big enough to respond swiftly and efficiently in an emergency.

It may sound like the best of both worlds, but that's exactly the promise made by Red Alert, a security company that has national ambitions but is still based in Ashford. where it was set up 17 years ago. Red Alert has the back-up, the experience and the skilled engineers to deal with every eventuality, but still provides outstanding service with a local feel and has looked after many of its customers since managing director Clive Gawler began the business in 1993.

Red Alert installs smoke detection and fire alarm systems as well as a wide range of wired and wireless intruder alarm systems.

On the subject of maintenance, Clive is so committed to providing good service that he doesn't expect customers to sign a contract for that vital annual check.

"If we give a good service then we expect our customers to ask us to Clive's team also fits automated gates and garage doors that allow access at the touch of a button and installs external security lighting that reassures the householder while making life more difficult for any potential intruders.

It installs CCTV cameras that can protect commercial as well as domestic property and has contracts with councils and companies across Kent.

A true local success story, Red Alert now looks after parts of the National Gallery in London as well as other high-profile galleries and big-name customers.

But while the company is growing steadily and making a name for itself well beyond the county's borders, it remains committed to providing an efficient and friendly service to loyal local customers who like to see the same faces arrive to carry out their annual alarm sys-

"The town didn't have anything like that at all - there are the odd pound shops and supermarkets that sell some things – but apart thought I'd give it a go.'

Mrs Clarke runs the shop herself and relishes the opportunity to get to know the townspeople. She said: "Over a period of time people get to know me, I get to know them and it's friendlier than a shop assistant in a big store who doesn't know you from Adam.

"It's nice really because over a period of time you get to see people quite regularly. A lot of people come in, especially a lot of more elderly people, for a chat.

"They don't come in to buy anything half the time but they ask about my holidays and the children. I'm in a small town and people have got to know me, which is nice because otherwise it can be a long day!

"It's nice to get someone in to pass the time. We donate raffle prizes to the schools and the summer fêtes so you get to be part of the community."

BAKING A PROFIT: Orange Tree owner Sandra Clarke stocks those everyday kitchen items

the little bits and pieces the big places don't bother with. They are interested in the big machines and gadgets. I make sure I stock all the bottle brushes and sugar tongs.

"People always come in and say: You haven't by any chance got...' I've been going 12 for years so, over that period of time, you do get to build up your knowledge. On the whole I can answer most of people's questions or get them what they want."

And Mrs Clarke has found the downturn has had some unexpected consequences in her field of business. She said: "Cupcakes are a really big trend at the moment. They have taken off really, really well.

"Since the recession people have been coming back to do more cooking from basics. They're not buying pre-made food – they're making it themselves and doing their home-baking.

"It's not just the older generation now – it's the younger families with their kids learning to cook again."

Recession fails to floor carpet specialist

THERE may be an underlaying recession, but an Ashford flooring business has bucked the trend by opening a brand-new showroom on the prestige Orbital Park site

Trevor White set up Diamond Floorings as a mobile flooring business just three years ago, driving out to potential customers and leaving them with samples they could look through in the comfort of their own homes.

Despite launching during the worst economic conditions for decades, the business took off, and Trevor soon realised that he needed a permanent showroom to capitalise on the increasing demand caused by referrals from his existing customers.

"It's been astonishing," said Trevor. "While other businesses are struggling, our sales have increased to the point where I needed to open a showroom to meet demand. I couldn't drive quickly enough to get round the customers who wanted me to visit them!"

The result is a new showroom housing a wide range of carpets and vinyl floor coverings at The Glenmore Centre, Moat Way, on Ashford's prestige Orbital Park. Diamond Floorings is the area's only stockist for the exclusive British-made Victoria Carpets range and for Karndean designer floor tiles.

The showroom, which opened at the weekend, will serve both domestic and business customers with a range of quality floor coverings, from premium carpets and designer vinyls to top-name laminates.

"The showroom has a much more intimate feel than the traditional warehouse-type building and I'm determined to continue to offer the personal service that has helped us to get to this position," said Trevor.

"In particular, we will continue to offer hassle-free fitting at a time that suits the customer and we will do any furniture moving necessary, get rid of the old flooring and vacuum behind us."

Meet Brittain's most trusted sales staff

STAFF at Brittain & Hobbs have been providing people in Sittingbourne and Sheerness with electrical appliances since 1972, writes Jill Hurst.

While other independent firms have crumbled in times of economic hardship or up against corporate giants, this family business has managed to entrench itself so well it's become part of the fabric of both towns.

The firm sells a range of appliances including washing machines, cookers and televisions, together with smaller items such as toasters and irons. It also runs a rental centre and repair service for its own items in addition to electronic goods, laptops and games consoles.

Although still involved in the rental side of things, founder Ron Britain has passed the day-to-day running of the company to his son Robert and a team of 16 staff, including branch manager Michael Prizeman.

Brittain & Hobbs is down to its customer service. He said: "It's a very friendly place to work. I've been here 14 years and some of our engineers have been here donkey's years.

Michael says this has resulted in a consistency customers have come to trust. There's certainly more repeat business here than anywhere else I've worked and that's a reflection of the level of service.

"Our aim is to provide a quick and personal service. Bigger chains may have stores in the area but their warehouses are located in various parts of the country. This means customers have to wait for their orders.

"We have a warehouse on site so if you buy a fridge-freezer in the morning you can have it in the afternoon.

"Unlike the big chains we provide a complete service so our engineers won't just dump stuff and run. If they're delivering a television, for example, they'll make sure it's set up and the customer is happy before they leave. "It's small details that make a difference and that's why people come back to us.'

Brittain & Hobbs take their position in the community seriously, participating in town events such as the carnival and sponsoring a charity fun day each year.

They've also moved with the times using the internet to spread their message and keep in touch with clients boasting 300 friends on the social networking website Facebook

Hard work, reliable products, trustworthy staff and a commitment to the community seems to be their formula for success

And having made the final 12 in the Swale Chamber of Commerce's business of the year award - with the winner being announced in October - it seems the customers aren't the only ones who think so.

Taste Kentish fare in ideal historic setting

ELVEY Farm is a medieval farmhouse in a magical setting in the village of Pluckley and a visit there is like stepping back in time, writes Nick Ames.

Meridian TV's Jeff Moody is the man behind one of the county's top venues when it comes to stylish dining and last Christmas opened the restaurant.

Since then Jeff and his partner Simon have been amazed at the number of people who come to eat at their restaurant.

"We see so many familiar faces," said Jeff. "Some people come back week after week, which is lovely because you get to know them."

The restaurant is in a 16th-century barn and enjoys a wealth of period features and views over the fields.

Specialising in old-fashioned Kentish recipes, it showcases some of the best local dishes.

The kitchen has also resurrected some old classics, such as game meatballs, and apple and cobnut pudding, and these sit comfortably alongside modern alternatives such as salmon and prawn terrine.

Chefs have created a dish called A Taste of Kent, which includes hoppicker's pie, hunter's pie and venison and chestnut casserole.

Staff have tracked down many of the old recipes to create truly unique food such as a watercress lady's lunch and thresher flan.

Gypsy tart is also a current favourite on the menu as a dessert.

Jeff said he wanted a new challenge and the chance to be his own boss after years as a TV reporter.

He said: "Being independent has given us the chance to experiment and ensure that we keep to local recipes and produce.
"Our motto is 'Kentish to the Core'

"Our motto is 'Kentish to the Core' and that includes making sure even the soap is made locally.

"We think it's extremely important to do this. Our meat comes from a farm just down the road in Smarden and our fish is caught off Hythe.

"The Old Kentish recipes are all faithful recreations alongside our own creations.

"For instance, the watercress lady's lunch is in honour of a local ghost — an elderly lady who smoked a pipe and drank gin, but set herself on fire and then drowned after jumping into a stream to try and put the fire out.

"It's a duck breast salad with juniper berries and marinated in gin. This is just one of the advantages of being an independent business. We can try out different things and express ourselves."

Jeff added that he was very happy in his role as a restauranteur and guesthouse owner.

"I spent a long time in TV, both BBC and ITV2," he said. "But now I'm doing what I always wanted – being my own boss and having the chance to express myself and do what I want to do."

You'll love being on the road to Santa Fe

WHAT'S the most important part of your new car? Miles to the gallon, resale value, CD system?

No. If you intend to drive any distance, comfortable, supportive seating is number one.

After 30-odd years of driving, I've lost count

After 30-odd years of driving, I've lost count of the back trouble I've suffered due directly to rubbish seating in cars.

For me it's top priority and drivers who suffer the same problem should remember it as they sign the cheque for their shiny new motor.

So, the only thing I was going to criticise about the Hyundai Santa Fe was the driver's seat: electrically adjustable, leather, heated, so it should have been easy to get comfortable.

But it wasn't. I needed more lumbar support and cussed it a few times until the eighth day (and almost 900 miles later), as I prepared to return it to Hyundai, I discovered – conveniently placed on the side of the seat – two buttons... to alter lumbar support.

How I missed it I will never know. Perhaps it was the fact that it was loaned for a weeklong holiday in Norfolk and I was on my way within hours of taking delivery.

But I can confirm that for the final few miles in my stewardship the seat was finally comfortable, perhaps it could have done with a fraction more side support when taking bends, but it would be churlish to complain.

So, the Santa Fe is a fine 4x4, good-looking in the same way Merc off-roaders manage and – I'll whisper this – it's a bargain.

Ignore the green anti 4x4 brigade and consider the Santa Fe-a good-looking estate car with stacks of space and rugged 4x4 when the going gets tough.

Hyundai provided a top-spec CRD with seven leather-trimmed seats and a smooth

Self-levelling suspension (7 seat only) six-speed auto box, which lists at £25,705.

Its 194bhp 2.2 litre diesel actually feels much bigger and, even with auto, she'll tow 2,000kg.

The lower spec Style starts at just over £21,620, so we are talking value here.

The green dashboard ECO light comes on when you're driving sensibly, 2,000 rpm means about 70 in 6th, so mid 30mpg is easy.

It feels as familiar as a Ford Fiesta to drive, and despite the size, is easy to manoeuvre. The indicator and wiper stalks are on the 'wrong' side, like old Japanese cars, as is the South Korean way, but you soon get used to it.

The seven-seat option was perfect for a week's holiday with three teenagers. On the journey to Norfolk they sat in the back, and the load compartment swallowed enough luggage for the trip and the self-levelling suspension kept the whole car in shape.

In Norfolk I spent a lot of time on country roads doing 30-50 mph. It's not a sports car and

ALL-ROUNDER: The Hyundai Santa Fe was perfect for a family trip to Norfolk, with its even-seat option and iPod docking

I wouldn't drive it as such. She rolled a bit more in corners than a saloon or estate but slow in accelerate out on bends meant swift progress with a minimum of passenger discomfort.

The Santa Fe has specific MP3 and iPod sockets to play through the decent stereo, which forms part of a neat, tidy dash, bathed in blue light, which I like.

Will she off-road? Yes, I think so. A couple of passing places in narrow lanes had me welcoming the electrically folding door mirrors and I had a couple of the wheels 'off-road'.

I discovered you could turn off the ESP and engage the diff lock to get muddy but I didn't need to. The biggest benefit though for my return to Kent and its terrible road surfaces was the sensibly profiled road tyres on handsome alloys. No pothole fears with this baby.

The likes of Kia and Hyundai have come on massively in the past 10 years and they make cracking motors now that compete with the best and with their gold-plated warranties they are now world bestsellers. Enough said.

My tip would be choose according to your dealer. Many are brilliant, some may not be, so ask around and trust your instinct.

WHEN money is tight, the last thing many of us need is to fork out thousands on a new car or spend hundreds of pounds on renairs.

But if your motor gives up the ghost, leaving you without wheels, then a new car, or paying for repairs to your current one, is an expense that must be met.

The internet is bursting with bargains and offers that seem – and often are – too good to be true.

Many local dealers say that the deals found online come with catches and clauses not always obvious to customers, plus there is the fact that it is much harder to examine a car that may be shipped to you from the other end of the country, or even abroad, for yourself

So why should buyers buy their car from a local dealership?

Bryan Smith, the principal dealer at Baileys Nissan in Canterbury said that local dealers offer many deals as competitive as you would find elsewhere.

He said: "Staying with a local dealership is simple. If you have any issues with the car then you can deal with us face-to-face and resolve those issues in person. This could save you a lot of time and money in the long run.

"If you pick up a car that's delivered from, say Edinburgh, and it turns up with a scratch on it, then your problem is with the dealer there

Why keeping it local can bring you peace of mind

Buying from a trusted local dealer brings benefits over internet deals

WHAT PRICE SATISFACTION? Great service brings drivers back to their local dealer, something internet deals cannot equal

"Also, the local dealer is as competitive as ones elsewhere in the country as we all work to the same margins, so there shouldn't be much difference in the transaction price. "The internet changed the industry, but a lot of the offers that are advertised don't even exist. We always have offers on new cars, offer low-rate financing, free roadside assistance, minimum part-exchange deals and incentives for our loyal customers. I think this is why people come back to us, as well a high-level service. At Baileys we like to treat our customers as part of the family."

Steve Ashby, sales manager at Pierremonts in Broadstairs, said the relationship that is built up with customers is a key part of what makes local dealers a better bet.

"The aftercare is an important thing, as well as what we can do for the customer once they've taken the car home.

"We will look after their needs in the future if we can, taking time to understand what the person wants.

"It's not just about making a profit for dealerships like ours. If you give someone good service then they are likely to return, and that in itself is valuable to us.

"We have some people who have been coming to us for years, to get car after car, and that is a really nice feeling, to know that person is satisfied by the service we offer.

"Also there is that reassurance that the car's history is known to us, which might not be the case if ordering from the internet.

"It all goes to show that staying local really is a great option."

Documentary-style thriller can't exorcise sense of the ridiculous

BY DAMON SMITH

FILMED in the faux documentary style, popularised by The Blair Witch Project and Paranormal Activity, The Last Exorcism follows a fourth generation evangelical preacher as he attempts to expose exorcism as pure bunkum.

With a camera crew conveniently behind him to capture every bump in the night, the man of God instead comes face to face with pure evil and perhaps the one bona fide case of demonic possession in his career.

Director Daniel Stamm attempts to create the illusion of reality by allowing the cast to improvise around a loose narrative framework, and many of the actors play characters with the same Christian names.

However, Huck Botko and Andrew Gurland's underlying script increasingly strains credibility and the camera has a knack of pointing in the right direction to capture vital parts of the narrative, when there should be some events which bypass the lens entirely.

The Last Exorcism opens in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, where Reverend Cotton Marcus (Patrick Fabian) tends to his flock.

Pressed into service at an early age, Cotton followed in the clerical footsteps of his father John (John Wright Jr), praising the Lord to his faithful believers, his wife Shanna (Shanna Forrestall) and son Justin (Justin Shaffer).

The holy man has slowly lost his faith and has decided to expose the smoke and mirrors he uses to conduct fake exorcisms.

So he travels to Ivanwood with director Iris (Iris Bahr) and her cameraman to meet farmer Louis Sweetzer (Louis Herthum), who believes that his daughter Nell (Ashley Bell) is possessed by the dark side.

Cotton conducts the fake exorcism, and both Louis and Nell believe the evil spirit has been purged from her body.

Soon after, events spiral out of control and

CREATING REALITY: Iris Bahr as Iris Reisen, Caleb Landry Jones as Caleb Sweetzer and Louis Herthum as Louis Sweetzer, and right, Patrick Fabian as Reverend Cotton Marcus and Ashley Bell as Nell Sweetzer

Cotton is forced to return to the Sweetzer homestead with the camera crew to consider the possibility that Nell might be under the influence of a demon after all.

"I'm not comfortable that we're in a house with a girl who is drawing pictures of me with my head chopped off," says the cameraman, speaking for us all.

The Last Exorcism is well made and night time scenes are particularly effective, captured in the light fixed on top of the camera which swoops back and forth, looking for figures in the all-enveloping darkness.

Fabian is an engaging central protagonist and by the end of the film, Bell has staring lifeless into the camera down to an art form.

If Stamm's film is anchored in reality, it cuts itself free for the overblown resolution, which attempts to give credence to the disturbing images in Nell's drawings.

Crucially, if this was a real documentary made on the Sweetzer estate, then the final frames logically suggest the footage would never see the light of a brand new day.

OLD CODGERS: The sun has finally set on Last of the Summer Wine

YOUR TV REVIEW FAREWELL TO LAST OF THE SUMMER WINE, BIG BROTHER AND THE BILL

THREE TV stalwarts came to an end this summer: Last of the Summer Wine, Big Brother and The Bill.

Last of the Summer Wine has been on the box my whole life.

Every episode seemed much the same. Three old codgers end up plummeting down a hillside after having got tangled up in some escapade involving tights and an old bath/bicycle/canoe/pram or whatever comical mode of transport the writer had chosen that week

It was a bit like watching the Goodies on vitamin supplements. As a child, it was a marker that the veekend was over.

When I was at university I lived near Holmfirth, the Yorkshire village where the series is shot. Bus loads of tourists would come to walk past Nora Batty's house or have a cup of tea at Sid's Cafe, where Compo,

BY ED HILL

Clegg and whoever the tall one was that series, would hang out.

A mature student in my year, Terry, claimed he was Compo's stuntman. He certainly looked the part. He said it helped to bring in a bit of extra cash when he wasn't running his market stall in Leeds.

The script consisted of endless discussions about Eccles cakes. ladies' undies and hapless husbands, punctuated by accidents that would send a pensioner to the grave.

More recently the show became a sort of retirement home where every old actor or actress who had ever been in a TV sitcom could remind us they were still alive.

As for Big Brother, no doubt TV executives will miss the cost-effectiveness of filling their schedule with hours of footage about nothing.

I have not watched it since the first series, when it seemed like an interesting social experiment. After that I took an occasional glance at the celebrity series until I realised I did not know who any of them were. Finally, the coppers at Sun Hill have felt their last collar. The Bill seemed fresh and realistic when it started but I lost interest when it went to three episodes a week. I feel sorry for all those actors fresh out of drama school. Where will they go for their first telly job?

If you miss these shows I say forget television and support your local pub. You can see OAPs bickering about the pointlessness of life there every night. If you are lucky, they may end up in a police cell. Then the regulars can decide which one to vote out.

Ford peps C-Max appeal

FORD'S all-new C-Max MPVs go on sale next month from  $\pounds16,745$ .

The five-seater is intended to uphold the out-going car's reputation as one of the sportier people carriers on the market, while the seven-seat Grand version (£18,745) with twin sliding rear doors is a new departure – the first generation C-Max was only ever available with five seats.

Both versions will sell as well-specified premium models with just Zetec and Titanium trim levels – at least initially – and a choice of three petrol and two diesel engines.

Jaguar leaping ahead

JAGUAR sales are roaring – the UK sporting executive marque said sales have leapt 45 per cent so far this year and a whopping 74 per cent in August against August 2009.

and a whopping 74 per cent in August against August 2009.

This was achieved despite the end of X-Type production and no replacement model and while largely driven by the success of the XF, which outsold its Audi and BMW rivals in every month so far this year, the new XJ saloon was also director's car sector best seller for May, June and July.

Nissan turns a new Leaf

ORDER books have opened on Nissan's new Leaf – claimed to be the world's first affordable, mass-produced, 100 per cent electric vehicle.

Deliveries start in March, priced at £23,990 – including a £5,000 government incentive and the new 20 per cent VAT rate – but Nissan says it will be possible to run the Leaf for less than two pence a mile and with reduced servicing costs, exemption from London's congestion charge, zero road tax and zero benefit in kind penalties for company car drivers.

MAKING A NOISE: Peugeot has raised its game in the MPV stakes and the 5008 offers the versatility demanded by users and the glass cabin gives it an exemplary fit and finish

Peugeot finally gives table a thump with new 5008

THERE probably isn't a lot of Gallic shoulder-shrugging and table thumping at Peugeot.

But the 'quiet man' of the French motor industry has waved its arms around lately with: a Nissan Qashqai riposte (3008), a stunning rival to the Audi TT (RCZ Coupe), a supercar concept and plans to take the Lion Brand' from No10 to No7 in global production volumes within five years by launching 14 new models.

Oh, and it just did an about face and launched a proper people carrier and it's one of the best – the seven-seat 5008 (from £17,495).

Marketed as "Enjoyed by families – loved by drivers" it mostly gets away with it too, although any MPV is bound to stretch the latter point and the 5008 is outclassed by a Ford S-Max on a winding rural road, but the Ford can't match the Peugeot's ride quality, so it comes down to personal preference.

The executive class cabin features exemplary

The executive class cabin features exemplary fit and finish – Peugeot has raised its game here lately – plus the vital versatility that MPV buyers demand.

The 5008 has good individual seating for seven or multiple permutations – helped by the sliding mechanism on the three second row chairs – and with all five rear seats capable of folding flat for van duties.

Rarely for this sector, the rearmost pair also takes adults rather than being restricted to passengers who keep asking Dad "are we there yet?" when he's already ratty from having to buy an MPV.

Not surprisingly, the flagship Exclusive spec test car with a 1.6-litre HDi 110bhp diesel helped first impressions with its full-length panoramic roof plus powered sunblind and head-up display showing speed and a distance alert for the car in front reflected in your sight line.

However, the test car's six-speed EGC (electronic gearbox controlled) transmission had me in two minds – much the same can be said for the device itself.

On paper, this clutchless manual delivers better and greener performance than the manual for just £400, but the fully auto changes are jerky and erratic. Buy it if you mostly prefer manual changes and would use auto only in town traffic – don't buy if you habitually drive an automatic because it won't be smooth enough in most situations.

PROPERTY NEWS

Construction slowdown bad news for builders

A NOTED fall in construction orders in recent weeks is bad news for the industry, the Federation of Master Builders (FMB) has said.

Recent reports say seven per cent more surveyors have reported a fall in total construction workloads during the sum-

Figures from the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors found public housing and other municipal works were the worst-affected sectors, probably as a result of cuts in government spending

Additionally, the latest Markit/CIPS Construction Purchasing Managers' Index shows UK construction activity slowed to its weakest level in four months in July

Brian Berry, director of external affairs at the FMB, said: "Sadly, none of this is a total surprise as it reflects the feedback we have been getting from our members about the building industry suffering because there is less government money available for capital projects.'

However, he went on to say that the Government's green deal, which will see 26 million homes refitted, could potentially offer new job opportunities.

Mortgage rise fails to turn market forecast

THE number of mortgages being granted is up on the month – but down on the same period last year.

But it has led to some reports the housing market is heading for a double dip recession after it was revealed that the lending figure was the second lowest ever, compared with payments.

Gross mortgage lending increased by five per cent, to £13.6 billion, in July – up from the £12.9 billion seen in June, but lower than the £14 billion in July, 2009.

CML economist Paul Samter said it is difficult to see any particular speed being injected into the market for the rest of the year, with low lending and transaction levels dragging things down.

"But for most home owners, the situation is not that bleak," he said. "The vast majority of households continue to pay their mortgages in full every month, and many have benefited from the record low interest rates.

The margin between mortgage rates and the cost of funding to lenders through the swap rate market is at an all-time high, research from Moneyfacts recently suggested.

Buyers choose comfort over green technology

BY NICK AMES

A SURVEY of estate agents has revealed the kind of features that homebuyers look for when choosing a new home.

And surprisingly, tastes have not been too heavily influenced by environmental consider-

In this age of green living, when recycling and global warming are at the forefront of the news, features such as solar panels and views of eco-friendly wind turbines etc were considered the least appealing, whereas enhancements such as conservatories came out on top.

The research was conducted on behalf of Specflue, a UK supplier of flue, stove and chimney products, and asked experts what makes a property appealing to potential pur-

More than 80 per cent of estate agents rated a conservatory as the feature most likely to appeal to a purchaser, in comparison to solar panels and wind turbines only scoring 14 per cent and three per cent respectively.

Gemma Collins, spokeswoman for Elephant Windows in Kent, said: "I am not overly shocked by these results, as although the property market is currently on a rollercoaster ride and finances are uncertain with the ever looming effects of the recession, our sales in conservatories have almost doubled.

"What once could have been named the ultimate luxury within a household has now become affordable and can actually add thousands of pounds to the price of a property, especially as there are now products such as A-Rated windows.

"These types of windows can lower the loss of thermal heat that leaks through building fabric, thus fulfilling its environmentally friendly role to reassure the consumer, whilst still looking aesthetically pleasing to the eye.'

SITTING PRETTY: Conservatories are top of potential buyers' wish lists, say agents, with eco-friendly items such as solar panels and wind turbines lagging behind

The results of the survey also indicated luxury additions such as wood-burning stoves and wet rooms are among the top priorities when looking for a new home.

Peter Maskell, managing director of Brock Taylor Estate Agents, added: "These findings clearly show the features that appeal to potential purchasers. People's tastes have become considerably more sophisticated over the last 10 years and buyers now search the marketplace with a specific wish list in mind.

Check home insurance small print

HOMEOWNERS should talk to an insurance provider before taking out home insurance, in case they are unaware of some clauses which affect the outcomes of deals, say experts.

The British Insurance Brokers' Association (BIBA) says it is concerned that many people are unaware that home insurance policies have differing occupancy clauses, which generally sets a maximum number of days that you are allowed to leave a property empty.

BIBA technical and corporate affairs executive Graeme Trudgill explained that homeowners need to take advice on what they will be required to do if they intend on exceeding this occupancy clause.

He said: "Lots of people don't get advice. They just go online, find the cheapest thing and click buy'.

"BIBA are concerned that people are just buying online without reading the terms."

His comments follow the publication of data earlier this year, suggesting that uninsured victims of burglary face an annual bill of £200

TITLE WINNERS: Sibton Park's batsmen set up an easy victory against Hythe to seal promotion to the Premier Division

Kent League Division One Sibton Park 1st XI v Hythe 1st XI

BY DAVID PRITCHARD

A CRUSHING win over near neighbours Hythe added an extra sweetness to Sibton Park's second successive championshipwinning season on Saturday.

The 138-run victory underlined Park's status as the best side in Division One and means they can now look forward to playing Premier Division cricket next season, a year after winning the Division Two title.

With promotion already in the bag, all that remained for Steve Hobbs' side was to pick up the two points they needed to be sure of finishing ahead of second-placed Blackheath.

Hythe, already relegated, offered the perfect opponents on paper and after winning the toss Park set about finishing the campaign on a high. Tim Bishop and Andy Allon put on 84 for the first wicket, with the former going on to make 82 before he was run out by Andrew Maurice.

Tom Payne (55 not out) and Ben Allon (43) picked up the mantle after Bishop's departure, propelling the home side to 242 for 4. Lochan Blunden was the pick of Hythe's bowlers, taking 3 for 32.

The visitors' two wins in the league this season had come from chasing down scores, but any hope they could finish the campaign with a flourish was dented almost Opener Christopher Maurice became the first of Steven Rowe's four victims, departing with just four runs on the board. Jon Smith and Leon Morgan quickly followed and from then on it was only a matter of time.

Hythe were all out for 104 in the 32nd over, allowing Park more time to celebrate another superb season.

Blackheath 1st XI v Folkestone 1st XI

A MASSIVE opening partnership was critical as Folkestone lost their final game of the season at Blackheath by 60 runs.

The key part of the match came right at the start, as Blackheath's openers piled on the runs. Zobie Sharif (82) and Chris Willetts (81) put on 152 for the first wicket which gave the home side a great platform to go on and

Stuart Graham and Nathan Smith hit half-centuries in reply, but Folkestone paid for a lack of runs elsewhere at the top of the order

Sandwich Town 1st XI v Canterbury 1st XI

VISHAUL Singh broke the 1,000 run barrier to finish as the Kent League's top run scorer as Sandwich finished the season with a three-wicket victory against Canterbury.

The visitors were indebted to Paul Steer for getting them. to a competitive total. The number three made 142, scoring almost three-quarters of the visitors' 200 for 7.

Sandwich made a slow start, but roared back thanks in part to Singh. His 79 not out provided the spine to their reply and he was still at the crease as the hosts brought up victory with an over to spare.

Betteshanger Colliery Welfare 1st XI v Bexleyheath 1st XI

THE SEASON ended on a low note for Betteshanger Colliery Welfare as a poor batting display saw them slip to an 88-run defeat at home to Bexleyheath.

The hosts will have fancied their chances at the halfway stage, with Bexleyheath all out for 200. Jamie Towe (4 for 68) and Andrew McNicolas (3 for 32) did most of the damage, but it could have been much worse for the visitors. who were rescued by 63 from Chris Hobbs Betteshanger's reply lacked a talisman and they slumped from being well in the game at 73 for 3 to 112 all out.

Deal Victoria & Barns Close 1st XI v Bapchild

A SOLID all-round performance saw Deal Victoria & Barns Close rubber stamp their second promotion in as many years with a 29-run win against Bapchild.

The hosts needed just two points to confirm their status as runners-up and steady scores from all their batsmen laid the foundations for a good afternoon. Shane Beu top scored with only 35, but seven of his team-mates contributed at least 16 each to get them to 235 for 9. Graham McNamara starred with the ball, taking 4 for

Toughen up on the home front, urges Whites boss

Slabber 42

A FIRST defeat of the season for Dover Athletic has forced manager Martin Hayes to call for his side to raise their game and be ruthless in front of goal.

Eastleigh became the latest team to stifle the Whites so far this season, inflicting a rare defeat thanks to Jamie Slabber's well-taken goal three minutes before half-time.

While Dover have been impressive on the road, winning three out of three, they have won once in four games at Crabble as the visitors increasingly come with a game plan to frustrate.

Hayes said: "A couple of sides have done that to us at home already. Eastleigh are a good experienced side, but teams like Welling and Staines [who have both got draws at Crabble this season] are probably going to come and give Dover more respect than last year. We're not new boys anymore, we have to accept that and raise our game.

CHANCES: Adam Birchall (in white) came close to getting Dover on the board in Saturday's defeat against Eastleigh

"Sides will come and sit back, that's maybe why we have found it easier away from home this season. It all comes down to putting the ball in the net. Eastleigh took one out of two chances, we had four or five, but didn't take them. It's something we've got to keep working on in training."

Hayes made three changes from the side which started the Bank Holiday Monday win against Thurrock. Two were enforced, with Luke l'Anson coming into central midfield for the suspended Joe Tabiri, while a pulled quad muscle in training on Friday ruled out Harry Crawford, so Elliott Charles started up front. The final change saw Nicky Nicolau preferred to Kane Rice.

The visitors enjoyed a bright start without testing Ross Flitney and against the run of play Dover had the first clear sight of goal. Matt Fish's through ball found Adam Birchall, who cut the ball back for Charles, but the chance was snuffed out as the striker delayed his shot.

Birchall also fired over in the first-half, but the Whites trailed at the break to Slabber's 43rd-minute effort. Receiving the ball with his back to goal he flicked it over his marker, swivelling to volley into the corner.

Rob Gillman made an outstanding block to prevent a second goal shortly after the resumption and from then on Dover were the better side. Birchall was twice denied by Gareth Barfoot, but the Eastleigh goalkeeper saved his best for Ben Hunt, tipping the substitute's effort on to the post late on.

Despite the defeat, Dover remained well placed in the top four. They visit second-placed Braintree Town on Saturday looking to preserve their 100 per cent away record.

FA Cup respite for luckless Invicta

Lowestoft Town 4 Folkestone Invicta 1

THE FA Cup will offer Folkestone Invicta some respite this weekend after their tough start to the season continued at Lowestoft Town on Saturday.

A Darren Smith goal in the first-half was the highlight from another difficult afternoon for the Seasiders, as they came up against another of the division's fancied sides.

It did not get any easier last night when unbeaten Kingstonian were the visitors to Cheriton Road, but Invicta can at least put league concerns to one side this Saturday. They host Horsham, the only side below them in the Ryman Premier before last night's games.

Invicta boss Neil Cugley admitted to feeling slightly underwhelmed by the opposition, who he thinks are in a false position in the table.

He said: "It's a shame when you have

He said: "It's a shame when you have someone in your own league, the draw of the FA Cup is playing against teams from other areas who you wouldn't normally come up against. Horsham probably feel the same as us. I think they will be shocked if they go down, I expect them to climb the table."

After romping to the Ryman North title last season, the Trawler Boys have high hopes for this season and are the best supported side in the division, with 831 attending on Saturday.

Lowestoft raced into a 2-0 lead before Smith gave the visitors hope by pulling a goal back before the break. Taking a corner short, the midfielder received the ball and his delivery beat everyone and found its way into the net.

Paul Jones missed a good chance to equalise, but Lowestoft went on to claim a deserved three points with two goals in the last 20 minutes, the latter going in off Liam Friend.

Bay got away to a flier and were 2-0 up inside 18 minutes. Steve Hanson headed in the first at a corner and Dan Lawrence doubled the advantage with a stunning strike from 25 yards.

Significantly Hythe hit back within a minute. Craig Thompson laid off for Cass, who fired into the corner to get on the scoresheet for the fifth successive game.

The home side went on to be the better side, with Bay goalkeeper Steve Northwood far busier than Kieron Mann at the other end. Hythe's pressure finally paid off midway through the second-half when Pat Kingwell's free-kick was met by Dave Cook, whose header beat Northwood.

Neither side could find a winner, but Bay were reduced to ten men in the dying seconds when Aaron Firth received a straight red card for an alleged elbow on Cook. Next up for Hythe is an FA Cup tie at home to Epsom & Ewell on Saturday.
